

HUNTING TROPHIES SHOWN
AT STATE FAIR EXHIBIT

-----

Few modern hunters have to build cabins to hold their trophies, but any Virginia sportsman who wants the thrill of looking at such a collection has only to visit the exhibit being conducted this week at the Virginia State Fair by the State game department and the U. S. Biological Survey.

The hunter's cabin filled with big-game skins<sup>s</sup>, mounted birds, antlers and other trophies is, however, only one of the sets included in the Fair's wildlife exhibit. Others urge farmers to make game a farm crop, illustrate the varied activities of the Federal bureau, and show game birds that are no longer abundant.
